

“I am very happy with my decision to live in Dannat Hall. I have a sizeable room, and I did not have to have a roommate, so it is an ideal place to work and study. The room was fully furnished when I came in; the only big things I had to bring were a television set and an air conditioner. The laundry room is open 24 hours, and the machines are free. The gym is right next to the laundry room, it is a great diversion when waiting for a laundry cycle to finish. The staff at Dannat are very helpful. When I first moved in, I did not know where anything was on campus, let alone where anything was in White Plains. They were eager to tell me everything. I got great advice on where to food shop, what restaurants had the best deals for an off-campus dinner, where to get a haircut, what suit cleaners were the fastest; they told me everything I needed to know. The residential assistants are all upper classmen, and they can be an invaluable resource for any law school related questions. The events that the residential assistants hosted were a lot of fun, and a great diversion from the tedium of everyday law school life. The best part is, I feel like Dannat Hall is constantly getting better. The administrators and staff are always looking to make things more like home. Just recently, they put very comfortable new furniture in all of the lounges. Dannat Hall is a really great place to live, and although campus is just outside my window, I really felt at home there. “

“As a resident of Dannat Hall for approximately two years, I can truly say that living in Dannat made my transition from undergrad to law school much easier than I believe it otherwise would have been. The sense of community that developed during my first few months of studying at Pace Law enabled me to adapt to the rigors of being a law student, while at the same time developing friendships and establishing a comfort zone on campus.

During my second year, my level of involvement on campus and off-campus dramatically increased, which emphasized the other main advantage of living in Dannat Hall: convenience. Due to an internship in the city, night classes, and other factors, free time was something of a rarity for me this year. Being centrally located to campus was crucial in staying afloat in what is often described as the busiest year in law school. Added together with new large screen televisions, the assistance of the Office of Residence Life, and friends continuing to remain close, I can accurately say that living at Dannat Hall has aided me in getting through law school.”

“I first moved into Dannat Hall when I was a 1L here at Pace. What appealed to me most was the premise of living on campus and the opportunity to get to know my fellow peers. The convenience of Dannat's location and the sense of community that is built among the residents is what kept me coming back for my remaining 2 years of law school. Especially now, with the new renovations and the competitive pricing, living at Dannat has become an even better experience.”
