

Global Center for Environmental Legal Studies LLM Graduate Fellow

Pace University's Elisabeth Haub School of Law is hiring a Global Center for Environmental Legal Studies Graduate Fellow. The Fellow will work part time in the Global Center for Environmental Legal Studies (GCELS) while earning an LLM in Environmental Law.

About GCELS

GCELS is the international and comparative arm of the Pace Environmental Law Program. It anchors innovative and ongoing projects addressing a wide range of global environmental issues. GCELS maintains close relationships with important international environmental organizations, giving students unique insights into and experience in a fast developing area of environmental law. GCELS is one of only two law school entities that is a voting member of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN), the world's oldest and largest global environmental network. Through GCELS' partnership with IUCN and others, students participate in identifying practical solutions to pressing environmental challenges. The UN Environmental Diplomacy Practicum allows students to work with small island nations on pressing environmental matters with diplomats at the United Nations. The China Program gives students the opportunity to collaborate with students and scholars at Shanghai Jiao Tong University and Wuhan University Law School, among others. GCELS also holds periodic national and international symposia and conferences, and is the joint-Secretariat for the IUCN Academy of Environmental Law. We are the only top environmental law program that is about forty minutes away by train from New York City and two hours away by air from Washington, DC, providing students with easy access to outstanding practice opportunities.
